A discussion concerning the legal recognition of copyright rather than patent in DNA nucleotide sequences as they relate to Mechano growth factor. A discussion of Emergent Genetics India Pvt. Ltd V Shailendra Shivam, Ravindra. With this case we finally have a ruling on the interesting debate on copyrightability of DNA sequences which had been brewing for some time.

Keywords— copyright, DNA Sequences, intellectual property

Biography
Mark Engelman is a pharmacologist (King’s Lond.), trained as a barrister. Having practiced with in 2 firms of IP specialist solicitors, 2 major multinationals, he is head of IP at Hardwicke, a set of barristers. He has been non-executive directors of companies which include Alexander McQueen and the patent owner of the Mechano Growth Factor suit of patents. He acts for numerous multinationals. He is a Research Associate at St Edmunds College Cambridge in IP and Bencher of the Hon Soc. of Gray’s Inn, London. He is he legal correspondent for The Pharma Letter

mark.engelman@hardwicke.co.uk