

Attitudes toward end-of-life care among community health care providers and its influencing factors- A cross-sectional study

Hong-rui Shi*, Ying Zhang, Bai-feng Shan, Qian Chen, Xiu-ying Hu

West China School of Nursing, Sichuan University, Chengdu 610041, PR China

Abstract

A majority of nurses struggled with a negative emotion of anger, doubt, fear, or anxious, uncomfortable in the face of death and dying. However, little was known about community health care providers' in China. Therefore, we conducted a study to investigate their attitudes toward end-of-life care and analyze its influencing factors. To provide reference for developing effective strategies to promote end-of-life care in China.

Abstract Citation:

Hong-rui Shi, Attitudes toward end-of-life care among community health care providers and its influencing factors-A cross-sectional study, Health care 2020, 3rd Annual Conference on Pediatric Nursing and Healthcare; Webinar - April 29-30, 2020. <https://healthcare.nursingconference.com/>

Biography:

Hong-rui Shi is a nursing PhD candidate who is on her first year in West China School of Nursing in Sichuan University in China. She focuses her research on geriatric nursing and nursing education.

Speaker Publications:

1. "Knowledge and attitudes toward end-of-life care among community health care providers and its influencing factors in China: A cross-sectional study"

3rd Annual Conference on Pediatric Nursing and Healthcare;

Webinar- April 29-30, 2020.