Nursing Management is a medical specialty focusing on the structure, function and disorders of the Entire body system. Nursing management consists of the performance of the leadership functions of governance and decision-making within organizations employing nurses. It includes processes common to all management like planning, organizing, staffing, directing and controlling.

It is common for registered nurses to seek additional education to earn a Master of Science in Nursing or Doctor of Nursing Practice to prepare for leadership roles within nursing. Management positions increasingly require candidates to hold an advanced degree in nursing. Goals include providing access to specialized care for patients experiencing pain, providing education of the public regarding self-advocacy for their pain needs, and providing a network for nurses working in the pain management field.

This society also sponsors educational conferences and is formulating a means of adding compensational value to the specialty of pain management nursing. The ASPMN has published a number of scholarly position papers regarding best-practice nursing standards for such situations as male infant circumcision, procedural analgesia and sedation, patients who are unable to self-report pain complaints, and others.
